A Note to the Reader:

With this volume, the State Archives completes the process of reviving the work of Albert Cross and offering us a reliable reference to special legislative acts. Cross published his Index to the General and Special Legislation of the State of Vermont in 1894. Before that time, to find a citation to special legislation that established a municipal charter or incorporated a railroad company, you would have had to leaf through the various volumes of acts and resolves for each year from 1779 onward.

Cross's contributions to the scholar, the legislator, the legal historian, have long been respected by those who use these early materials, but general public awareness of his accomplishments has never materialized. This is the fate of those who serve by sitting in cramped rooms pouring over dusty tomes, and Mr. Sanford can hardly expect to be treated differently by history, even if he has made a remarkable contribution himself to the scholarship on the history of Vermont.

That this second and final volume of Cross's Index should principally cover corporations is appropriate. The Office of the Secretary of State has been responsible to maintaining corporation records since Vermont's first corporation, Clio-Hall, was established by act of legislation in 1780. While there were ineffective attempts during the Nineteenth Century to remove the Legislature from the business of incorporating and amending the charters of Vermont corporations, a constitutional amendment establishing a system of corporation filings by general law was finally adopted in 1915, marking the natural end of the legislative record on private corporations.

Vermont has long needed a good history of business in this state, and this Index will play a vital role in that research. It will also be valuable to lawyers and corporate officials, who often need to find the legislative origins of existing corporations.

Legislative references such as this Index are only one way of recognizing the importance of legislation as a source of Vermont history. Sadly, little attention has been given over the years to the preservation and collation of legislative materials. What we have is scattered in various repositories, and is maintained haphazardly. The Legislature itself has begun to limit the number of recorded committee hearings that are transcribed. We can only hope that this Index, while it is a modest effort, might be the stimulus for a revival of interest in a permanent and respectable collection of legislative reference materials relating to Vermont. In the meantime, the State owes Mr. Sanford and his staff yet another debt of gratitude for a publication of obvious value to researchers throughout Vermont.

VERMONT CORPORATIONS:

An Index To Private Corporations Formed By the Legislature

D. Gregory Sanford
State Archivist

This is the second, and final, volume based on Albert P. Cross's 1894 publication, Index to the General and Special Legislation of the State of Vermont. Volume Nineteen of the State Papers of Vermont, Vermont Municipalities: An Index to their Charters and Special Acts, enumerated and updated Cross's entries for municipal corporations.

This volume does the same for Cross's entries for private corporations. In general, this volume contains information on corporations formed by special act of the legislature between 1777 and 1913. Following a format established by Cross, it also includes entries for corporations formed through articles of association between 1864 and 1897. This is not an inclusive listing of Vermont corporations, since there were several methods by which businesses and groups could incorporate without a special legislative act.

Despite this limitation, the index is a useful tool for studying the history and development of business in Vermont. The index also allows for examination of local history through its inclusion of incorporated cemetery associations, literary groups, cornet bands, and other town-based organizations.

Without the index, information on these corporations, whether still active or long defunct, would be extremely difficult to retrieve. We were able to compile the index only by searching through each volume of Vermont session laws and through the appropriate volumes of the Records of the Formation of Corporations.

From 1777 until 1913 the Vermont Constitution gave the Legislature the power to grant charters of incorporation (see Chapter 2, Sec. 9 of the 1793 Constitution). An amendment adopted in 1913 limited the Legislature's incorporation powers to municipal and other public corporations and provided for private corporations to incorporate under general statutes (see Article 69 of the Vermont Constitution).

From the start the General Assembly allowed certain types of corporations to be created without legislative action. The Revised Statutes of 1797, for example, allowed churches to be incorporated through voluntary association in order to hire a minister, fix a place of worship, and hold estates. Until 1892 churches were not required to file articles of association with the office of the secretary of state. Act #60 of 1892 required such filing, while exempting churches organized prior to 1892 which held title to real estate. (see Congregational Church of Chester, et al. v. Chestina Cutler, 76 Vt. 338 (1904)).

Over time the legislature allowed other public service corporations to incorporate through voluntary association. Examples include social libraries (1800); aqueduct associations (1835); literary and scientific associations (1836); fire companies (1843); bible societies (1843); agricultural societies (1844); societies assisting indigent churches (1846); societies aiding widows and orphans of deceased ministers (1853); organizations "to aid in detecting and bringing to justice burglars and thieves, and for reclaiming and restoring stolen property to the rightful owner(s)" (1851); societies for assisting sick, wounded or disabled soldiers or the families of deceased soldiers (1867); musical societies (1874); societies for the propagation of fish and game (1874); and cemetery associations (1876).

The legislature, increasingly burdened by bills of incorporation, began to create exemptions for private corporations as well. In 1853 (Act 71) the legislature allowed three or more individuals to form private corporations for "manufacturing, mechanical, mining, or quarrying business...or for the purpose of building wharves, storehouses, or hotels...." through voluntary association.

Again, exemptions were added, often reflecting local business trends. In 1869, for example, the law was amended to add businesses "...for erecting or repairing buildings and renting or selling the same, and for purchasing or owning mineral springs, and for bottling and selling the waters thereof...."

Incorporation by voluntary association was granted to businesses for "the purpose of printing, publishing, or dealing in newspapers, blank books, blanks, stationery, music and musical instruments, and for establishing and maintaining public or private parks" in 1878. Also in 1878, organizations "providing, fitting up, keeping in repair, and managing suitable grounds...for fairs" were added to the list.

Most private corporations had to file their articles of association with either the secretary of state, the municipal clerk, or the county clerk. By 1874 most corporations filed articles of association with the secretary of state. These filings were recorded in volumes entitled Records of the Formation of Corporations. These volumes are held by the Archives.

Another method of incorporation was opened by Act #2 of 1872. This act allowed for the incorporation of railroads under general statutes, thus removing one of the most controversial and divisive types of special acts from the legislature.

Despite the above exceptions, the list of corporations formed by the legislature is impressive and gives a good sample of the types of businesses operating in Vermont. The history of Vermont's corporate law remains a relatively untouched area. We hope the publication of this index will encourage research into the evolving role of government in business registration and regulation.

Other sources that can be used to obtain information about specific corporations can be found in the Office of the Secretary of State. The Corporations Division maintains a card file on revoked or withdrawn corporations (ca 1890 to the present). The Division has kept a computer data base on current and non-current corporations since 1984. The Records of the Formation on Corporations volumes, held by the Archives, include corporations formed up to 1970. The volumes frequently note dates when a corporation's charter was revoked or withdrawn. Each volume is indexed separately. For statutes governing the formation of corporations the Vermont Statutes Annotated and the various compilations of Vermont statutes published between 1797 and 1947 should be consulted.

To compile this index we examined each volume of Vermont session laws and noted all special corporate acts. For pre-1894 entries we then double-checked our findings with Cross's index.

Since we originally were checking all special corporate acts, public as well as private, we examined session laws passed after 1913. Even though the constitutional amendment of that year ended special acts for private corporations, we did occasionally find exceptions. In 1933, for example, the Ai A. McCullough Mountain Turnpike Road corporation was formed by special act.

Once we had a listing of all special corporate acts, we separated them by whether they were municipal or private corporations. The municipal acts were then published as Volume 19 of the State Papers of Vermont series.

In some cases it was very difficult to determine what constituted a municipal, versus a private, corporation. Often private corporations provided municipal services. Fire and water companies and school academies, for example, frequently started as private corporations before becoming part of the municipality. For that reason, we recommend using this volume in conjunction with Volume 19.

Cross did not restrict himself entirely to special acts of the legislature. He included parts of Volumes 0 through III of the Records of the Formation of Corporations. Volume III ends with 1897. We kept these references and added entries from these volumes not originally included by Cross. Except for these four volumes, we stayed with the criterion that a corporation needed to be chartered by a special act in order to be included.

We changed the entry format from the original Cross's Index in order to list date of legislative act (or article of association), act number, page number, and brief description of act. When we were able to determine the location of a corporation's main place of business, we included that in parentheses following the corporation's name.

It should be emphasized that the index only indicates that a charter was enacted. It does not indicate whether the corporation became active. The index can, however, get you to a particular place at a particular time. From that point local resources should be able to indicate whether the corporation existed in more than name.

This index and the index to municipal charters complete our work on updating Cross's earlier work. We did not include everything from Cross's original index. We omitted the section on general legislation since that information is largely available through the Vermont Statutes Annotated. There were also a few entries from the original Cross's which could not be fit in as either municipal or private acts. The major group of these have been included in the appendix.

The economic landscape of 18th and 19th century Vermont is often obscured, first by the sheep craze and then by dairying. The view is further blurred by the long drawn out demographic and economic stagnation of most town economies. Scattered across this landscape are a few success stories such as E. and T. Fairbanks and Co. of St. Johnsbury, the Estey Organ Co. of Brattleboro, the Eagle Manufacturing Company of Shaftsbury, or the extractive industries such as Vermont Marble Co.

The index sheds greater light on this landscape. The number of corporations created suggests a more diversified, and perhaps more sophisticated, economy than portrayed in general studies. It came as a surprise, for example, to find a Holland and Morgan Telephone Co. being chartered in 1884.

From a different perspective it was startlingly to find numerous corporations such as the Houston Cure Co. of Rutland created in 1893 to treat cocaine addiction and other "modern" afflictions. The index is filled with corporations created to aid society's outcasts. There was a Home for Destitute Children in Burlington chartered in 1865; a Home for Aged Women in St. Johnsbury chartered in 1892; and a Home for Friendless Women chartered in 1890.

The number of town cornet bands incorporated during the mid-19th century suggests an active local social life. So do the various literary and scientific associations. Indeed, the first private corporation created by the legislature was Clio-Hall. Formed in Bennington in 1780, Clio-Hall was created "for the laudable Purpose of promoting Literature."

This index is the work of numerous people who spent hours noting special acts, checking entries from the original Cross, and typing and proofing the entries. Becky Ryan, Tim Tomasi, Alexia Bloch, Katrina French, and Greg Mitchell searched out each entry from the Laws of Vermont. Marjorie Strong organized and typed the entries. Marjorie also helped double check entries against the Laws of Vermont and compile the appendix. Sue Breer helped with the typing and proofing. Julie Cox, the assistant State Archivist, offered editorial assistance as well as helped with the proofing. This Index is the fruit of their labor.

ENTRY FORMAT

Entries are listed in alphabetical order, by corporate name. Where possible we added the principal place of business of the corporation in parentheses.

The year listed in the left hand column generally refers to the volume of Acts and Resolves passed by the General Assembly of Vermont. The next number indicates the pages within that volume of the session laws that the act can be found. A number of parentheses is the act number.

In the case of those corporations created through articles of association, rather than special act, the year is followed by RFC. The year indicates when the corporation was formed; RFC stands for Records of the Formation of Corporations; the Roman numeral indicates the volume; and the following number is the page number of that volume. The Records of the Formation of Corporations can be found at the Archives.

Corporations written in upper case indicate that there is a separate entry for that corporate name.

Other abbreviations used include:

1797, R....Revised laws of 1797. The first compilation of Vermont laws.

SP...State Papers. Volumes published by the State Archives. Roman numeral following SP indicates which volume. Volumes XII through XVI are reprints of Laws of Vermont, 1777-1799.

spec...special session.
